

There is a strong positive correlation between retweet count and favorite count. It has a pearson correlation coefficient value of 0.9161.

Charlie and Lucy are the most popular dog names in the WeRateDogs twitter archive data. Both of them occurred 11 times. On average, dogs named Charlie have 2735 retweets and 10318 favorites. Meanwhile, dogs named Lucy have 3199 retweets and 10037 favorites on average.

Puppos have the highest retweet count on average compared to the other dog types (floofer, doggo, pupper, puppo, or dogs that fit into none of these categories). Puppos also have the highest favorite count on average compared to the other dog types. This makes sense because there's a strong positive correlation between retweet count and favorite count. The majority of puppos are rated 13 out of 10. The majority of doggos are rated 13 out of 10. The majority of puppers are rated 12 out of 10. The majority of floofers are rated 12 or 13 out of 10. Other dog types are mostly rated 12 out of 10.

Dogs rated 14 out of 10 have the highest retweet count compared to the other ratings. Since the definition of 14 out of 10 is really ratings of 14 or larger, it is more accurate to say that dogs rated higher than 13 out of 10 have the highest retweet count on average compared to ratings 1 through 13. Dogs rated 13 out of 10 have the highest favorite count on average compared to the other ratings.

The Golden Retriever is the most frequently predicted dog. On average, they have 3563 retweets and 12138 favorites. When the first image is predicted a dog breed, it has a higher retweet count and favorite count compared to when it isn't a dog on average.

520 of the first image predictions are not breeds of dogs. The first images that predicted Arabian Camel have the highest retweet count on average. There were three instances that predicted Arabian Camel in the first image. The first images that predicted Laptop have the highest favorite count on average. There were two predictions for Laptop in the first image. When the fourth image is predicted as the most accurate, the retweet count and favorite count are the highest on average.